Hector William Wilson was born on July 19, 1924 in Renfrew, Ontario, to Scottish parents, Liford William Wilson (1894-1974) and Annie Mae McNevin (1897-1942).

His father, a farmer, served in the veterans guards in Canada during the Second World War. Liford Wilson also had served in World War One with the 148th Battalion. He had participated in Vimy Ridge, Passchendaele, Mons and Ypres. He was wounded on two occasions, and gassed once.

The family consisted of Betty Mae (1927-1932); Christina Evelyn Wilson (1928) and Glen Duncan Wilson (1933-2013).

In his hometown, Hector attended public school until Grade VII but he quit to work at the O'Brien Woollen Mill in Renfrew and help the family. He was accepted for military service on July 3, 1939, close to his 15th birthday, with the Lanark and Renfrew Scottish Regiment in its pipe band.

In his paybook, he listed service in the "42nd Black Watch" regiment from "1938-1940".

With the war declared in September, he attended annual training in August 1940. But military authorities discovered he was "under age" and discharged him from the army on June 19, 1941.

Seeking work in Canada's industrial towns, Hector Wilson was working as a steelworker for United Steel Company in Welland, Ontario, when he enlisted on Aug. 27, 1942 in nearby Hamilton. His enlistment document described him as "small and slight build" standing 5 foot 5 inches and weighing 122 pounds as well as being "young and immature". The year of 1942 was also when his mother died of tuberculosis on Jan. 10 at age 44 back home in Renfrew.

During this period, he also was treated for tonsillitis and the mumps and recovered in military hospitals in Hamilton and Niagara-on-the-Lake in Ontario.
